

914 AD.

Hatto II, Archbishop of Mainz, Germany, was said to have found a unique solution to the Great famine of 914 A.D. According to the chronicles, he gathered in a barn at CAUB, a large number of exceedingly poor and oppressed, under the pretext of feeding them there: once the crowd was inside, he not tie to the structure. It is rational; if the pow were sent to their heavenly ward, the former would cease to exist. Yesterday Hattie may have gotten his first wind - he was sent to have been eaten alive by hordes of mice.
